

TFA: 686

Title: The relationship between revolution and war (a case study of the Iran-Iraq War)

Writer or Author: Rahim Mosavi

University: Imam Khomeini (PBUH) and Islamic Revolution Research Institute

Keywords: Imam Khomeini. Revolution and war. Iran-Iraq War

Abstract: Before the Islamic Revolution, most of the revolutions that took place in the Third World were influenced by the Russian Communist Revolution of 1917. However, unlike all revolutions before and after Russia, the Islamic Revolution was the first revolution that took place in Iran in the name of Islam, in other words, with the slogan of the inseparability of religion from politics, in 1957. However, on the other hand, and almost similar to most of the world's great revolutions, this revolution also became involved in a foreign war with the neighboring country of Iraq after its victory, and this left us with the question of why it became involved in such a war after nearly two years of the revolution? Therefore, in this study, in order to answer the above-mentioned question, we have tried to examine and explore the relationship between the Islamic Revolution and the Iran-Iraq War using an integrated theoretical framework, especially by utilizing Stephen Walt's theory of revolution and war.